

Dear Prospective Fellow,

The Memorial Foundation is pleased to announce the launch of the inaugural class of 2021 Social Justice Fellows Program! Through this program, young people from across the nation will engage in high impact learning and training designed to equip them with the knowledge and skills needed to advance Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.'s legacy and realize ongoing social change in our society. Guided by the tenets of Democracy, Justice, Hope, and Love, the Social Justice Fellows Program will convene virtually in the Summer 2021 and serve as home to fifty Fellows. Selected applicants will engage in an eight-week dynamic learning and personal development experience that will be led by some of the nation's leading voices on social justice. The outstanding line up of presenters include, Birmingham Mayor Randall Woodfin, Pulitzer Prize nominated author Jelani Cobb, CNN/NPR political analyst Angela Rye and Activist Marc Lamont Hill.

As one of our valued partners and sponsors, we are excited to extend an early invitation for you to share this opportunity with your colleagues and networks to assist us in identifying a culturally diverse, bright, and energetic pool of applicants for this unique experience. The Fellows Program is open to emerging leaders (ages 18-35) from all walks of life who have a desire to impact change in a variety of settings (e.g., community; workplace; school; etc.). To learn more about the Fellows Program, or to apply for this program, please visit The Memorial Foundation's website (www.thememorialfoundation.org/socialjusticefellows).
